Bill, I would suggest a small change (insert “primarily”) because there are other minor types of CII injection.

David, before I send this around, I just wanted to run this change to the first sentence of the desk statement by you:

In March 1983, U.S. EPA granted regulatory authority to the State of California’s Division of Oil & Gas (now Division of Oil, Gas & Geothermal Resources, or DOGGR) for certain types of wells (Class II) that are used primarily to inject steam or water for enhanced oil/gas recovery, or to inject waste water (such as brines) from oil and gas production.

OK? After talking to you, I read through some of the EPA website materials (<http://water.epa.gov/type/groundwater/uic/class2/>) which was helpful...
